

HUNTSVILLE, Ala.--Dr. Wernher von Braun, who has been chosen as the director of the future National Aeronautics and Space Administration facility at Huntsville, today announced the selection of Delmar M. Morris as the Deputy Director for Administration.

Dr. Eberhard F. M. Rees will continue as Dr. von Braun's deputy in the technical area. His title will be Deputy Director for Research and Development

The selection of key personnel and the drafting of organization plans are going forward in order to allow a rapid changeover with no loss in time to the technical programs when the Congress approves the Army-NASA transfer.

Morris, now an official of the Atomic Energy Commission, will have charge of all of the Huntsville facility's administrative and support operations, including purchasing and contracting, accounting, personnel management, supply, transportation, plant maintenance and operation, and various other technical services.

The new deputy director is in Huntsville at present on temporary leave from his AEC post in San Francisco. He expects to assume full-time duties here early in March.